

Talent and determination—not gender—should define success in manufacturing.”

Manufacturing was never my initial career choice, but my deep emotional connection with my father and his vision for Rajoo Engineers made it a natural path for me. As an only child, I felt a strong sense of responsibility to contribute to the company's growth and take it to greater heights. What started as a commitment to my family's legacy soon became a passion, and I found myself drawn to the dynamic challenges of this industry.

Over the years, my experience in manufacturing has been nothing short of transformative. It has pushed me to think strategically, embrace innovation, and drive meaningful change in an industry that has traditionally been male-dominated. From marketing and financial management to after-sales service, every aspect of my journey has shaped me as a leader.

Today, my focus is on positioning Rajoo Engineers as a global name while fostering an inclusive and merit-driven work environment. I firmly believe that women in manufacturing do not need reservations or special treatment, we are just as capable as our male counterparts. The real change lies in creating a culture where talent, determination, and expertise define success, rather than outdated gender norms. The industry is evolving, and I am optimistic that the future of manufacturing will be shaped by inclusivity, innovation, and equal opportunities for all.”
